Noelle McGreenera QC, Co-Chair

What are Referral Bars?

A Referral Bar is a group of barristers or advocates practising in a particular jurisdiction. They take pride in their independence and their expertise is sought because they specialise in the oral presentation of cases and in related advice and drafting work.

They generally acknowledge themselves to be bound by the 'cab-rank rule' under which they are precluded from refusing instructions on the ground that the nature of the case, or the conduct, opinions or beliefs of a prospective client, are publicly controversial or unacceptable to the advocate.

More about the Referral Bars and their Community

The Australian Bar Association

The Australian Bar Association provides a common voice for members of the independent Referral Bars from throughout Australia. There are eight Referral Bars throughout Australia - one for each State and Territory.

The Australian Bar Association has striven to engender in its members a sense of pride to practise as a member of a profession that is proud of its independence, confident of the service it provides and aspiring to continual improvement in the skills and art that assist in the administration of justice and the maintenance of the rule of law.

The Bar Council of Ireland

The Irish Bar aims to provide its clients with a high level of expertise in all areas of law combined with skilled advocacy by persons of integrity and independence.

As of October 2010, there were 1,989 Junior and 296 Senior practising members of the Law Library.

Most barristers practise in Dublin, but approximately 114 practise in Cork and 179 in the rest of the country.

The Faculty of Advocates

The Faculty of Advocates is a body of independent lawyers who have been admitted to practise as Advocates before the Courts of Scotland.

The Faculty includes practising and non-practising members. The current practising Bar includes an increasing proportion of women. Women make up approximately one quarter of the practising membership.

Total numbers now stand at just over 460, of whom approximately one fifth are Queen's Counsel.

The General Council of the Bar of England and Wales

There are now around 15,000 practising barristers in England and Wales including over 1,300 practising QCs. The majority of the profession (around 12,000) are barristers in private self-employed practice. Self-employed Barristers usually group together to form a set of 'Chambers'.

There are more than 340 Chambers in England and Wales (the majority of which are based in London) and an additional 350 or so sole practitioners.

There are also around 3,000 employed barristers, for example those who work in the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS), Government Legal Service (GLS) or as in-house counsel in industry.

The General Council of the Bar of Northern Ireland

This year, the Bar Council of Northern Ireland is marking 90 years as the leading provider of expert independent legal advice and courtroom advocacy in a jurisdiction which has endured significant challenges to justice and the rule of law throughout its history. There are currently 667 barristers and 69 Queen's Counsel, practising across a diverse range of specialisms.

Access to training, continual professional development, modern research technology and state of the art facilities within the Bar Library system enhance the expertise of individual barristers and ensure the highest quality of service to clients. The Bar Council is continually expanding the range of services offered to the community through tribunal advocacy, arbitration, negotiation, alternative dispute resolutions and the Bar Mediation and Expert Witness services.

Increasingly barristers in Northern Ireland are extending their practices internationally, playing a significant role in ground-breaking legal judgments in local, national and European courts. Through the legislative Assembly in Stormont, the Bar is actively engaging with government in shaping justice policy and the development of new legislation.

The General Council of the Bar of South Africa

Advocates who are members of the Bar of South Africa are competitive specialist advocates, with expertise in trial, motion court, appellate and opinion advocacy.

Advocates are sole practitioners, a status which enables them to market their professional service without additional administration costs.

The Hong Kong Bar Association

The legal profession in Hong Kong consists of solicitors, barristers, foreign lawyers, and notaries public, all of whom are regulated by the Legal Practitioners' Ordinance, Cap. 159 of the Laws of Hong Kong (The LPO).

Generally, only barristers have the right of audience in Hong Kong's High Court, Court of Appeal and the Court of Final Appeal.

As at December 2010, there were 1,106 practising members.

The New Zealand Bar Association

The New Zealand Bar Association (NZBA) has a membership of around 800. Membership of the NZBA is generally open to every person who is the holder of a current practising certificate as a Barrister in New Zealand (with some exceptions for Associate Members of the NZBA).

There are currently:

Over 70 members who are Queen's Counsel/ Senior Counsel
Over 500 Barristers with over 7 years' Call
Over 50 Barristers between 4 to 7 years' Call
Less than 40 Barristers between 0 to 3 years' Call.

The Society of Advocates of Namibia

The Bar identifies itself fully with and is committed to the values and ideals embodied in the Constitution of the Republic of Namibia. As a body of legal practitioners who act on a referral basis, the Bar is committed to providing specialised legal representation at fair fees to all persons who require these services.

In 1995 the Legal Practitioners Act, no. 15 of 1995, came into operation and both attorneys and advocates became legal practitioners and members of the Law Society of Namibia. The Society has grown from 15 members in 1995 to a present membership of 24.

The Law Society of Zimbabwe

The Law Society of Zimbabwe was formed in 1981 to replace the previous Bar association. Its membership is drawn from all registered legal practitioners residing in Zimbabwe whether in private practice, commerce or the civil service.

The primary functions of the society are to:

- Promote the study of the law
- Contribute, undertake or make recommendations on legal training
- Control of admission of new members to the profession
- Maintain a register of members
- Regulate the profession in respect of continuing training, discipline and trust accounts
- Represent the profession and articulate its views on various issues
- Promote justice, defend human rights, rule of law and the independence of the judiciary
- And generally control and manage the legal profession.
